NEW YORK — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, amid growing signs of a U.S. reluctance to assume a renewed mediation role in Lebanon, says there is "a long way to go" before international arrangements can be made for an Israeli withdrawal from southern other major U.S. role.

Mr. Shultz's earlier negotiating efforts in Lebanon.

The failure of that effort became final with the Lebanese repudiation of the May 17, 1983, Israeli-Lebanese agreement. At that time, the company had assets of less than $20,000. When he left it in 1981 as executive vice president, its contracts totaled more than $600 million.

Mr. Donovan served as chairman of the Reagan-Bush committee in New Jersey for the 1980 campaign. It was then that he also reportedly charmed the future president.

His appointment as secretary of labor drew immediate opposition from organized labor, which contended that he was named only because he was a major Republican fundraiser and that he lacked the background to deal fairly with

Murray Seeger, spokesman for the AFL-CIO, refused to comment on the indictment Monday night, but he repeated complaints that Mr. Donovan had the worst relations with organized labor of any modern labor secretary, had out back on virtually every program supported by unions and had made many "anti-union" appointments to key jobs.

The combative Mr. Donovan surprised many of his critics with his staying power, combined with an aggressive campaign to overhaul his image.

Syria Said to Identify Kidnappers

BEIRUT (UPI) — Syrian agents negotiating the release of Hussein Fatrash, a kidnapped Saudi Arabian diplomat, have identified the group holding him and also holding William Buckley, a U.S. diplomat, and Jeremy Levin, an American journalist, the pro-Syrian Beirut newspaper Al Sharq said Tuesday.

The newspaper did not name the group. Telephone calls earlier this year claimed responsibility for abducting the three men in the name of Islamic Jihad, which also has claimed the bombings of three American installations in Beirut in the past 18 months.

Al Sharq said the Saudi Arabian diplomat could be released soon, but reported no progress in efforts to free the two Americans. Mr. Farrash was kidnapped in January. Mr. Buckley, first secretary of the political section at the U.S. Embassy, and Mr. Levin, a correspondent for the Cable News Network, were abducted in March.

The fuel remained in the rear of the plane while the wings were swept groups as it can before election day. Congress is packaging a catchall foreign trade bill riddled with favors, mostly protectionist. House and Senate conferees could still restore its respectability. The law would radically alter rules against "dumping" foreign products in the United States at less than home market prices. And a misguided House amendment targets imports of goods produced from subsidized natural resources - for example, cement produced in Mexican factories that get a discount on Mexican oil. If other countries applied this standard to their imports from the United States, California artichokes might also be penalized: They are grown in soil irrigated by subsidized water projects.

There is some good in the legislation. It renews the government's system of preferences for imports from developing countries - although Congress may shorten the list of favored countries, ft authorizes negotiations on a wholesale reduction of restrictions on trade in both directions with Canada and Israel. And it would give the government new authority to get tough with countries that will not lower barriers to U.S. companies that sell services such as insurance and technology.

What besides pre-election favoritism turned this package into a protectionist Christmas

In its haste to satisfy as many pressure tree? One factor is a growing feeling in the American business community that other countries are trading unfairly. There are no precise measurements, but America's markel is more open to imports than many others. And there is no exact way of judging how foreign government subsidies affect relative trade advantages. Such issues need review: after all, the United States also subsidizes many products in different ways. But they do not justify more protectionism.

An important part of the blame for the protectionist ardor also goes to the Reagan administration. For the widening imbalance in U.S. trade - imports soaring and export sales stagnating - is a direct result of big budget deficits that push up interest rates, thereby strengthening the dollar and adding a premium to the prices of American goods. The best response to the trade imbalance is to bring down the deficit, not to limit trade.

The burden will be on Senate and House conferees to sort out the useful from the pernicious in their bills. If Congress sends the president a basically protectionist measure, then let him remember what he told the International Monetary Fund only last week: We're not just fighting protectionism, we want to go forward to more open markets." -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Reagan administration, to its great credit, now raises the possibility of a veto of the trade bill. The bill would change the law regarding dumping. "Dumping" means selling exports in America at less than the price in their home market, or less than their cost of production. But those costs and prices are not always easy to establish, especially in a Communist country. The bill says that for certain non-market economies (read: China) there will be a new and unconventional test of dumning: Any goods entering the United States from there will be defined as dumped —and will be penalized — if they are sold for less than the average price of similar products being imported from other countries. Not the lowest price, mind you, but the average. That would in effect close the American market to Chinese products. Here, as elsewhere, the bill seems to be an attack not solely on unfair trade but on the principle of trade itself. To shut out Chinese goods would be more than a technical adjustment of the trade regulations. It would be a political statement with large implications for U.S. foreign policy.

What about next year? The defenders of this bill make one argument that deserves careful attention. With the exchange rate of the dollar flying high, making U.S. goods fiercely expensive in comparison with all foreign competition, it is surprising that the legislation now going through Congress is not more protectionist. The subsidies that foreign governments give their exports are mostly pretty minor, measured against the gigantic subsidy provided by the overvalued dollar. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige foresees a U.S. mer-chandise trade deficit of $130 billion this year and perhaps $135 billion next year - immense figures, far beyond any previous experience. The high exchange rates are the result of high interest rates and big budget deficits. By its easy toleration of them, the administration is risking a future outburst of protectionism that will make this year's bill look tame.

Countdown in Nicaragua

The pace quickens in Nicaragua. The government is offering to sign a regional peace treaty. Some sort of negotiation goes on between the Sandinists and opposition leader Arturo Cruz over the terms on which he might take part in, and thereby legitimize, the Nov. 4 elections. In Washington, Congress juggles with the fate of President Reagan's program to run an armed Nicaraguan insurgency,

For several years Washington and Managua have been competing to demonstrate support for the Latin democracies' Contadora initiative for peace in Central America. The Sandinists' decision to embrace a treaty still in draft can be seen in that context. Washington should welcome Managua's opening, advising Contadora to complete the treaty and assuring the region that il will support the security and political arrangements of its collective choice. Otherwise the United States risks hardening a widespread impression that its priority is oot peace but to do in the Sandinists. Will the Sandinists allow the Nov. 4 elec-Will the Sandinists allow the Nov. 4 elec-tions to be worthy of the name? The regime's seeing in the elections the single possible route to national reconciliation. Why do not the assurances of procedural fairness must be insurgents consider accepting a cease-fire right measured against the continued mob assaults on Arturo Cruz's meetings - a pattern that has kept him from organizing a campaign and that validates his request to postpone the vote a couple of months, Fortunately, the Latin and European democrats cultivated by the Sandinists are still pressing them to open the elec-tions. The foreign parties are also watching Mr. Cruz to ensure that his coalition does not make arbitrary demands. If the Sandinists are half as confident of their popular appeal as they claim, they will make the right move soon.

The House of Representatives has voted to cut off U.S. funds for the Nicaraguan guerrillas. The Senate is unlikely to follow suit. The difference will be resolved in a context that has changed in the time that Congress has been addressing this issue. The new factor is the possibility that the insurgency is one factor inclining the Sandinists to consider broadening the elections. The insurgents have agreed to impose a cease-fire if that happens.

We are torn on this one, having consistently opposed the U.S. role in the insurgency but now to show they mean it?

Other Opinion

Gromyko Yes, Honecker No

As Mr. Gromyko commuted between New York and Washington last week, Erich Honecker must have reflected ruefully on his own aborted visit to the West. What is permitted to Jove is not permitted to an ally. Together, the visit which Moscow ordered and the visit which Moscow stopped say something important about the future of central Europe.

Over the last year there bas been a significant disparity between Soviel foreign policy pronouncements and those of East European states. Moscow has presented the deployment of new NATO missiles in Western Europe as an almost apocalyptic catastrophe, walked out of arms control talks and unilaterally declared a nuclear winter in East-West relations. East Berlin, Budapest, Bucharest, Warsaw and even Sofia have preferred to talk of damage limitanons after the NATO deployment, of the need for a continued political dialogue with "responsible forces" in the West and of their desire for more Western trade and credits.

The humiliating public muddle in which Mr. Honceker was compelled to cancel his trip reflected the weakness, confusion and indecision of Soviet leaders. But Moscow is reasserting its control. East European leaders cannot expect permission to pursue better relations with Western Europe until Soviet leaders have sorted out their own relations with the Americans - and perhaps with each other.

FROM OUR OCT. 3 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1909: China Opens Mongolia Line PEKING - A notable illustration of Chinese capability in railway construction, and an incidental tribute to American education, has been furnished by the successful completion and opening of the Peking-Kalgan railway. This line, which connects Peking with the great trade routes of Mongolia, involved many difficult engineering problems, including a milelong tunnel under the great wall at Nankou Pass. It was built under the direction of Chinese engineers, who were educated in America. li is the first Chinese line to be constructed without foreign aid of any kind, and it is pronounced by all experts to be equal to the best anywhere. At the dedicatory exercise in Nankou [on Oct. 2], Hsu-Shih-Chang, the president of the Board of Communication, declared that the development of railways is the universal desire of the Chinese people.

1934: Studebaker Selling in Europe PARIS — International business has been interrupted in recent years, with all branches of commerce suffering, but in the automotive trade the American Studebaker is enjoying the best export traffic in the past five years. This is the statement made [on Oct. 2] by R.A. Hutchinson, regional director for Europe of the Stu-debaker Company, as be arrived for the Antomobile Show in Paris. "Sales of the Studebaker export group — Studebaker cars and trucks. Pierce-Arrow cars, White and Indiana trucks and buses - in less than eight months exceeded the total for every other entire year since 1929. Our business for the year to date is more than 50 percent larger than for all of 1933. Studebaker trucks continue to show the same rapid gain that has marked our business month by month since the introduction of the 1934 line early in the year," Mr. Hutchinson said.

Gromyko's Long Term Has Little to Show

PARIS — It takes deeply rose-tinted bifocals to find grounds for President Reagan's claim of foreign policy "gains" during his administration. But measure the world from the Soviet side. Moscow's scorecard has been terrible. The Soviet and American political calendars are so different that it is hard to fix a period for comparison. Andrei Gromyko has been foreign minister for 27 years, but he has served three leaders while Mr. Reagan has lived in the White House. Taking the Reagan years as base, Soviet diplomacy has been a resounding failure. (Over the longer term il looks even worse.)

The war in Afghanistan drags on five years after what was intended as quick, decisive surgery. It is beginning to be felt in Soviet families.

Lack of reaction during the 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon was a serious setback for Moscow in the Middle East. A role has been regained at the cost of massive arms supplies to Syria, but it has not given Moscow added influence. The United States has lost ground, too, but not because of superior Soviet diplomacy, and Moscow cannot turn that to its own advantage.

Moscow has been prudent in Iran, and that doubtless saved it trouble, but its prospects have not improved. Soviet arms are flowing to Iraq again, but Iraq tilts increasingly westward.

The Kremlin can take a glint of satisfaction from the advancing communication of Ethiopia; but the important Somali base it built at Berbera is now at America's disposal, Mozambique and Angola, where it had high hopes, are dealing with South Africa and waffling on the brink of better By Flora Lewis ties with America. Guinea slid out of the Soviet grasp. A pro-Communist coup in Gambia failed.

Moscow has mishandled its chances in Africa.

Nothing in Latin America offers encouragement to the Soviet Union. True, the wars in Central America preoccupy the United States, but there are no Communist successes. And Cuba remains a heavy economic drain. Fidel Castro keeps trying to flirt with Washington. One day there may be a deal behind Moscow's back.

Confrontation with China has been averted. Still, basic antagonism persists. Beijing is getting along fairly well with Washington, despite initial gestures by Mr. Reagan that appeared to provide a chance for drawing China back toward the Soviet side. Hong Kong can no longer be expected to provide an opportunity to exploit.

Vietnam's continuing troubles in Cambodia block any chance of relaxation between Beijing and Hanoi. That is certainly not a minus, consider-ing the importance of American-built Vietnamese bases now serving the Russians. But there have long been no gains. Decay of the troubled Philip-pine regime might offer good pickings one day. Moscow cannot do much about it, though, except prepare and hope. Asia generally has been a draw: no real losses, no momentum.

Europe, which matters most to the Kremlin, has taken the most effort and been the least rewarding.

A way was finally found to put the lid on Poland without taking Imge risks. But Poland has not been "normalized," as Czechoslovakia was after 1968; it is a running sore, hardly a loyal ally. All the Soviet allies but Romania shaped up on the Los Angeles Olympics and the planned up on to Bonn, but that amounted to little more than symbolic face-saving. A lot of table-pounding kept the East Germans from showing off their growing involvement with West Germany. But they could not be made to use their harassment capacity to scare and cajole West Germany out of accepting American missiles. The East Germans are getting rather full of themselves. Above all, the anti-Euromissile campaign was a disaster. There were plenty of chances to compro-mise, but Moscow's hard line only consolidated Western allies instead of wedging them away from America. A superpower's threats are supposed to be taken seriously. That is the point of all those Russian missiles. Something went terribly wrong. Meanwhile, Western Communist parties are hrinking, as in France or Spain, or turning away from loyal support, as in Italy. Soviet policy is stuck in concrete. Now it is Mr. Reagan who has seized the "peace initiative," not because he was quick but because Moscow huffed and puffed so long. Finding a way out without backing down will oot be easy.

The great Soviet arsenal has oot brought comnensurate political gains under Mr. Gromyko's long foreign policy stewardship. Moscow has bumbled into a dangerous impasse, even as Washington has been short on success

But the peace of the world is not a zero-sum game. Both sides could use better diplomacy. The New York Times.

Deficit Control Is a Key to Full Economic Recovery

WASHINGTON — Even be-fore the start of the present recovery, most economists began sounding an early warning about the harmful effects of huge projected deficits. Yet, while projected deficits remain about $200 billion a year for as far as the eye can see, the economy has enjoyed nearly two years of vigorous recovery and is dvancing at a healthy and potentially sustainable pace. Does all the good economic news mean that those early warnings were wrong? Is it possible that the projected deficits are not a prob-lem? If they have actually helped to drive the economy out of recession, won't they continue to stimulate growth? The answer to these questions is simple: No, no, oo.

The key to resolving this apparent puzzle is to understand that the dverse economic effects of the deficit are building up slowly. The neg-ative effect of a long string of defi-cits may not be immediately visible, but if there is no legislative action to reduce the projected deficits, they will have a serious cumulative effect on America's economic future. It is true that the U.S. govern-ment deficit helped to get the econormy moving again in late 1982. That is why it would have been wrong to cancel or postpone the scheduled cuts in personal income tax rates. It was better for the government to pass up the potential tax revenue so that private individuals would have the ability to spend. But while increasing consumer spending is helpful when the economy is in recession, increased national savings are essential for raising the long-term growth of the economy. That is the essential difference between "demand-side" economics and "supply-side" economics.

The main theme of Mr. Rosen-

The demand-side approach correctly asserts that a stimulus to spending can help speed economie recovery during a recession. But the supply-side approach is also correct in emphasizing that savings provide funds for investments that raise productivity and growth. Trouble develops for the economy when sav-

After years of criticizing the gov-the elections come too soon. He wants the entire electoral process to be postponed to allow him sufficient time to make up the ground he alleg-edly lost when he chose not to enter the campaign when it began two months ago. He also demands that the elections be not only monitored

Democracy demands that a gov-opportunity to obtain power in open and honest elections. This commitment, which my government pledged to honor when it came to power in 1979, is being fulfilled. But a "loyal opposition" is also a vital component of democracy. Do Mr. Cruz and his group merit such a title, when, in The Post's own words, they are "sabotagings are persistently diverted into financing a government deficit.

Whenever the federal government runs a deficit, it has to make up the shortfall by borrowing in the financial markets. The money it borrows in this way would other-wise be available for investment in business plants and equipment and in housing. Although deficits start reducing the level of investment immediately, it may take several years before the cumulative effect of lower investment in depressing growth is generally recognized.

In his recent remarks to the annual meeting of the World Bank and the IMF, President Reagan spoke of his desire for a period of increased world economic growth. He correct-ly pinned his hopes on the possibiliof future gains in productivity. When there is an increase in the amount the labor force can produce, that gain in productivity can be transformed into higher wages without inflationary consequences. Productivity gains can thus mean rising living standards for everyone. How can productivity rise? The only reliable way is through increased investment. A worker with more equipment is likely to be more productive. And the improvements in technology that the president re-ferred to can be stimulated by a faster rate of investment in the newest types of equipment, and by the availability of lower-cost funds to finance corporate investment in research and development.

Investment in the United States is now being supported by an unpre-cedented influx of foreign savings at an annual rate of more than $100 billion - enough to offset more than half of the current volume of government borrowing. When the capital flow from abroad begins to shrink - and that will inevitably happen -the full effect of the deficit on domestic investment will become more apparent. Without any flow of foreign capital, the rate of net investment in American plants, equipment and bousing would be one-third lower than it is now.

Although no one knows when the capital from abroad is going to dry up, America should not continue to live on borrowed time. To eliminate this risk and achieve the productivity gains and rising standard of liv-ing that the president (and every other American) wants, the deficit must be reduced in each future year.

When President Reagan campaigned four years ago, many things were on his agenda: lower inflation. reduced tax rates, stronger defense, less government spending on do-mestic programs, the balanced budget. He has accomplished all of these but the last. Those who question his determination to deal with the projected deficits in his second term should take note that, in this current campaign, the only promise on his economic agenda is to seek a balanced budget.

strangest aspects of the division

Moscow is irritated, to begin with, that East Germany's interest in trade and other contacts with West Germany has continued after Bonn's decision to accept deployment of American Pershing-2 and cruise missiles— a decision bitterly opposed by the Russians, And that interest results in part from an economic situation that surely has Moscow worried.

The Soviet Union remains dependent upon grain imported from the West; lately its crude oil production has declined, so that it has had to cut back exports and raise the price to other Communist countries. For these and other economic reasons the widening gap, for instance, between Soviet and Western technology - the Russians cannot meet the economic needs of their allies.

Thus, East Germany has good reason to trade with West Germany; the latter, for example, now ships part of its own imported oil to East Germany. Intra-German trade is particular ly important to the Berlin regime because it oeeds the imports, and can pay for them with exports rather than with hard currency — of which East Germany is so short that it requires each visiting West German to change at least 25 Deutsche marks a day.

So Moscow's prestige and influence in East Germany are declining at least marginally as the latter's coonomic dependence on the West rises.

U.S. Official Fears Rise In Air Traffic Hazards

By Richard Witkin

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The vice chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board says that inquiries into nine recent aircraft eollision hazards had increased the agency's concern about potential saturation of the air traffic system. One actual collision resulted in the crash of a small airliner.

The official, Patricia A. Goldman, told a Senate hearing Monday that if the only short-term solutinn was in re-impase flight restrictions, then the Federal Aviation Administration "must be prepared to bite this bullet."

Earlier, the administrator of the FAA, Vice Admiral Donald D. Engen, said at the hearing that Vice President George Bush's plane, Air Force Two, had been involved in such an incident Sunday. While it was never in danger, the agency chief said, the four-engine Boeing 707 came closer to a small twin-propeller Cessna ahead of it than the rules allowed.

· Admiral Engen, a retired navy pilot, said a controller at his agen-cy's Cleveland air traffic center had seen on his radar scope that Air Force Two, which was climbing, would not have the required legal separation when it reached the smaller plane's altitude. But by the time be radioed new instructions, it was too late to prevent the violation

The closest the Bush plane came to the Cessna ahead of it was ap-parently three-quarters of a mile horizontally and 500 feet vertically. The rules require separation by five miles horizontally or 1,000 feet vertically.

Admiral Engen said at the hearing that, despite "media reports of safety problems in the air traffic system, factual data showed that the safety of the system is continu-ing to improve." He said the number of confirmed near-collisions had gone steadily down, to 286 last year from 568 in 1980, and to 178 in the first eight months of this year. . The one-day hearing was called to consider both the efficiency and safety of the system. It was conducted by Senator Nancy Landon

U.S. Court Rules Schools Can Sue Asbestos Makers

NEW YORK - A U.S. district court judge in Philadelphia has approved a suit against 55 asbestos manufacturers on behalf of the nation's primary and secondary schools. It would be the first nationwide class action for property damage arising nut of a product liability question.

Uncle Sam Ranks 28th Among 100 Of the Principal Advertisers in U.S.

By Irvin Molotsky

ASHINGTON — Can U.S. savings bonds and enlistments in the army be sold the same way as tooth-

Apparently so, for the federal government is ranked 28th by the magazine Advertising Age nn its annual list of the nation's 100 leading advertisers, just a whisker behind Chrysler at No. 27 and a fair amount ahead of Nn. 29, the RCA Corp.

Enough government officials were sufficiently persuaded last year in spend $228,857,200 for advertising.

That is not much compared to the giants:
No. 1, Procter & Gamble, at $773.818,300; er No. 2, Sears, Roebuck, at $732,500,000. But it is an account large enough to warm a lot of hearts on Madison Avenue.

It puts Uncle Sam's messages behind Mc-Donald's hamburgers (No. 16) and Anneuser-Busch's beers (No. 20), but ahead of the Pillsbury Doughboy (Nn. 34), IBM's Charlie Chaplin reincarnatinn (No. 58) and most of the country's manufacturers of pills and potions, chocolates and chewing gum.

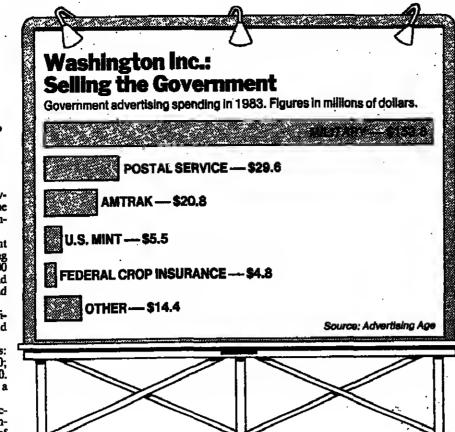

An agency that has increased its advertising substantially recently is the quasi-independent U.S. Postal Service. Its advertising grew from $20 million in 1982 to $29.6 milling last year and, by the Advertising Age estimate, could reach $38 million this year.
"There is no question that we had the increase," said James Van Loozen, a spokesman for the Postal Service. "You may ask, 'If using them to send letters. The Postal Service likes to use symbols — the eagle on its Express Mail envelopes is meant to signify reliability, Mr. Van Loozen said — and that nld standby of advertising.

Amtrak has also had a recent increase in advertising spending and, although Advertising Age includes it and the Postal Service in the list of government agencies, the passenger rail service differs. "We are nnt a federal agency," said John Jacobson, Amtrak's director of public informatinn. "We are a federally chartered quasi-public corporation. The minute you get the first dullar in subsidies, it creates confusion about your

In military and other advertising, the fed-eral government usually pays both for the production of the advertisements and for their air time on radin and television or their space in newspapers and magazines and on billboards. But in many cases, the government pays for the production and the advertising media contribute the time and space for their display as a public service.

This was the case with advertisements encouraging recipients of pension checks and the like to deposit them directly into banks, which would save the Treasury Department money by reducing paperwork. These advertisements depicted elderly people avoiding being mugged at the first of the month, and thus "played on people's fears," said William Rhatican, Washington vice president of the Advertising the nonprofit organization that coordinates the

Another such advertisement that plays on people's fears is one for the Department of Transportation to discourage drunken driv-ing. In the music of the Michael Jackson song, "Beat It," beer glasses are shown clink-ing together, fullowed by four high school students getting into a car. It ends with a picture of four skeletons in high school varsity jackets, said Mr. Rhatican, who said he finds the advertisement extremely effective.

Other advertisements that get free space or air time include those for the Peace Corps, U.S. savings bonds and for preventing forest fires (Smokey the Bear has been around since 1942). They also include campaigns against drug abuse and for giving members of the National Guard and Reserve time off for both their summer service and a vaca-

The value of all the donated time and space for these advertisements, Mr. Rhatican said, is $419 million. If that free time and space were added to the $228.8 million actuilly spent by the federal government, it would catapult Washington Inc. beyond Coca-Cola's soft drinks, beyond Nabisco's cookies, beyond even General Motors' car and into third place on the Advertising Age

N Milwaukee on that autumn morning of Sept. 14, 1983, Dr. Allan Kagen told Mr. Dohr's wife, Ruth, and his daughters, Bar-bara and Carol, that Mr. Dohr had suffered irreversible brain damage and would soon die. At that meeting, according to police affida-vits, the Dohr family asked the doctor to dis-connect Mr. Dohr's life-support system. Dr.

Kagen refused.

Like many other hospitals, St. Michael has had to develop guidelines to determine how long, given the new medical technology, some critically ill patients are kept alive by machines and doctors' decisions. St. Michael's policy states, "When a patient's life is being sustained solely by extraordinary life-prolonging measures and there is no hope of recovery, or death is imminent, the patient may have these life-prolonging measures discontinued by the attending physician."

Later, Dr. Kagen acknowledged that while he could have acceded to the family's wishes that morning, he decided not to because, even with life-support, death was imminent.

According to his own statements to the police, Mr. Engel, the nurse, knew the times of the doctors' rounds on his floor. He also knew how the life-sustaining machinery worked. At 6 P.M., shortly after coming on duty, he stood quietly by Mr. Dohn's bed, where, as Mr. Engel put it later, his patient was "maintaining his existence but not his life."

The nurse turned off the alarm systems on Mr. Dohr's heart monitor and on the respirator. He disconnected Mr. Dohn's oxygen supply. He waited for six to eight minutes until there was.

Then he reconnected the oxygen supply and summoned a doctor, who pronounced Mr. Dohr dead at 6:10 P.M. Shortly after, Mr. Engel notified the Dohr family that their husband and father had died peacefully and without pain.

IGHT months later, Mr. Engel, who had talked of his act with colleagues, one of whom was married to a police officer, was formally charged in a criminal complaint with practicing medicine without a license, a properly terminated," but only by a physician.

"Mr. Engel contends," Mr. McCann said, "that his motive was landable, i.e., to let nature take its course and spare Mr. Dohr his last comatose hours as the family wished. The law looks, however, not to motive but to intention, and Mr. Engel intentionally and willfully arro-gated to himself and acted out a role the law has reserved to the physician."

Mr. Engel, a graduate of Marquette University and an Air Force veteran, pleaded no contest to the charges.

"This kind of thing goes on all over the country every day," William E. Coffey, the nurse's attorney, said in an interview. "Without legal guidance and with so much fear in our brave new world, most doctors seem rendered impotent, doing nothing. Without up-to-date laws to guide people, the anguished decisions

"You must recognize that Mr. Engel is a sensitive, decent human being who did wrong based on the highest motive, dignity for a human being's last moments on Earth, in part because to one else would do anything. Mr. Engel did wrong —he admits it —but he is not entirely to blame."

According to the lawyer, Mr. Engel is returning to school but will not work as a nurse pending an Oct. 12 disciplinary hearing before or revoke his license.

"You know," Mr. Coffey adds, "if Mr. Engel had not been so candid with his colleagues and with the district attorney, no one would have known and no one could have done anything. It makes you wonder, doesn't it?"

After several days the weakening Mrs. Shn-lan told her doctors, "Do whatever." On Feh. 17 they performed a double brown, but then her condition worsened. She would not eat properly and was too weak even to cough out body

. Her daughter agreed to the "temporary" placement of her mother on a respirator, not realizing how difficult it would be to have the machine turned off later. As days passed, Mrs. Shulan, who could not talk because of the tubes in her throat, wrote numerous notes saying. "Please let me die." But the daughter refused. Mrs. Shulan tried to remove the tubes herself. So her hands were strapped to the bed.

Shulan's daughter recalled later, "that he'd give anything to take her off the respirator, but the laws of Arizona are such that if he did, he would be aiding and abetting a suicide." Mrs. Shulan's "living will" was useless in that state.

R. Jerome Targovnik told me." Mrs.

On several visits, Mrs. Shulan took her daughter's hand and tried to get her to unfasten the tubes. Mrs. Lurie explained that she could not do that. And then her mother, Mrs. Lurie tearfully remembers now, "withdrew into a little world of her own, because life was just too intolerable."

On March 23, Mrs. Lurie, her sister Carol Bloomberg and their attorneys stood before Judge Thomas O'Tnole in Superior Court in Phoenix, along with lawyers for Good Samari-tan Hospital, which did not oppose Mrs. Lurie's request for a restraining order to stop the hospital from treating her mother so that she could

'die with dignity." "It is not suicide," Mrs. Lurie's lawyer, Howard Snyder, argued. "All we are doing is terminating medical treatment and letting nature take its course, and there is a big difference." The hospital was concerned about being sued for violating its patient's civil rights. The daughters waived that right. And shortly after 5 P.M.,

Judge O'Toole signed the order.

At 7 P.M. it was delivered to the hospital. Mrs. Shulan's daughters entered their mother's room. They explained what had happened in court. They explained what would happen in the room then. Their mother nodded. The tubes were disconnected.

Twenty minutes later, Mrs. Shulan died. Mrs. Lurie cannot calculate the emotional toll of her mother's last months. Financially however, the bills totaled more than $117,000, paid by Blue Cross and Medicare. "The whole nation was paying to keep my mother alive when she didn't want to be kept alive like that, said a tearful Mrs. Lurie. "Mother had a good life. I'm not crying about her death, but for the way she had to go."

HE changing American attitudes toward medical care and death and who controls them can be seen in opinion poils. This June, 1,593 Americans were surveyed at andom by The New York Times-CBS News

Poll. "Medical technology now enables doctors to prolong the lives of many people who are terminally ill," respondents were told. "Do you believe doctors should stop using these tech-niques if the patient asks, even if that means the patient will die?"

Fully 77 percent agreed that patients should be allowed to ask that treatment be stopped. Only 15 percent said no, and 8 percent said they did not know.

The National Opinion Research Center has been asking a different but related question on euthanasia since 1947: "When a person has a disease that cannot be cured, do you think doctors should be allowed by law to end the patient's life by some painless means if the patient and his family request it?"

In the 1947 survey, 37 percent of the respondents answered yes. By 1973, slightly over half agreed, and last year 63 percent of the respondents were in favor of letting the doctor end the patient's life. Edna Leach was admitted to the General

Medical Center in Akron, Ohio, on July 27, 1980. She was having difficulty breathing. Two days later, the 70-year-old Mrs. Leach, a victim of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, a fatal illness known as Lou Gehrig's disease, experienced heart failure. Her heart was restarted, case." But the grand jury, a panel composed of

Her husband, Gifford, who was also 70 then, says he believes his wife died that night and that doctors just kept her bodily functions "alive." They had connected Mrs. Leach to a respirator without consulting the family and then would not disconnect it. "From that day on." Mr. Leach said, "she never recognized me."
The case is common. The family wanted to let a patient die, the hospital said it could not agree. But the Leach case could set a significant

When Mr. Leach had himself declared his wife's guardian and then petitioned to remove her life-support systems, the doctors resisted, saying that Mrs. Leach was still responding to deep pain. But Probate Judge Bill Spicer sided with the family and issued an order to disconnect the systems

The family's doctor and two dozen others refused. Finally, 30 miles away, the family found Dr. Gene Samuelson, who was also a Lutheran minister. On Jan. 5, 1981, in the presence of court observers and praying family members. Dr. Samuelson disconnected the respirator. Mrs. Leach, who had been in the hospital 162 days, died 26 minutes later.

Nearly a year after, upon receiving a hospital bill for more than $64,000, Mr. Leach filed a $1.26-million lawsuit against the hospital and the doctors, charging that the extended, unwanted treatment violated Mrs. Leach's constitutional rights. After numerous procedural disputes and appeals, the case is now awaiting a HAT'S important about the Leach case," said Mrs. Levinson of Concern ▼ for Dying, the cuthanasia group, "is that for the first time doctors, who have always been claiming they fear lawsuits if they don't do the maximum for a patient, may be taught a lesson that they are also responsible if they treat a patient against his or her wishes."

What needs to be taught to doctors and patients," says B.J. Anderson, associate general counsel to the American Medical Association, "is when it is appropriate to resuscitate — to keep people alive - and when it is not. This is from an ethical, an emotional and a financial point of view. The most expensive days of a person's life now are those just before death."

With 80 percent of American deaths now occurring in institutions and with most Americans now dealing with a number of medical specialists instead of a single family doctor, the werage American patient is making new de-

"People don't believe anymore in being passive recipients of medical care." said Leonard H. Giantz, associate professor of health at Boston University's Schools of Medicine and Public Health. give as a choice." According to Mr. Glantz, among others, the profound question is: Do you use a technology just because it exists?

"What is this technology designed for?" Mr. Glantz asked. "It was designed for the unex-pected heart stoppage, for the emergency room to gain time to help a victim. It was not de-signed to take a cancer-ridden elderly man with six weeks to live and when his heart stops, to get him going again so he can live six more weeks is a painful fog.

"You must justify technology's use in every instance. To treat every patient with every tech nology is to treat him for the doctor's benefit, for his fear of malpractice, not for the patient's well-being. Today we're dealing with the magic of death complicated by the magic of technol-

One night, after a job, he went to hear Johanny Ace, who killed him-self later that night playing Russian roulette. The death moved Copeland profoundly and he quit the Dukes of Rhythm a few days later.

When Collins decided to leave the band he was leading to find another style, Copeland was hired to replace him on guitar. The piano worked one or two nights a week for peanuts. Copeland did not think the band had much of a future because the piano player, who had a day job, was not hungry enough. So when Frank Newsome — everybody called him Big Frank — offered him a weekend in West Texas for $25 a night, more work than he had and more money than be was making, he took it. When they got out there none of the jobs materialized.

NYSE Falls in Active Trading

United Press Interno NEW YORK — After drifting aimlessly most of the day, prices on the New York Stock Exchange skidded to a two-month low Tuesday in a late burst of institutional selling that produced fairly active trading.

Brokers said investors were reluctant to make any bids because they were uncertain about the course of interest rates and an economy that has slowed down recently.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which lost

7.73 Monday, skidded 7.62 to 1,191.36, the lowest level since it finished at 1,166.08 on Aug.

2 when the summer rally began. Peter DaPuzzo of Shearson Lehman/American Express said "several rally attempts fizzled and the selling began to feed on itself when the Dow Jones average fell below 1,197."

Many technical analysts believe the closely watched average will drop to anywhere from 1,120 to 1,180 before the market regroups for another move to new heights.

Declines led advances by about 9 to 5 among the 1,961 issues traded.

Volume totaled 89.4 million shares, up from 73.6 million traded Monday, the slowest session n a month

Mr. DaPuzzo said, "several sell programs came into the market late in the day and that depressed prices further. The volume also picked up as prices began to fall and that indicates the line of least resistence is down for B while."

"The only game in town is the takeove said Dudley Eppel of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. "This market feels like it should have been down about 80 points the past couple of days but it hasn't done it."

U.S. Expatriates, Firms Bicker Over Tax Benefits

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herald Tribune

ARIS—Ever since the U.S. Congress decided Americans working overseas wouldn't have to pay U.S. tax on up to $75,000 of their foreign-earned income—the upper limit is now $80,000—there's been a tug-of-war between employer and employee about who should get the benefit.

Employees suspect companies of filling their pockets with surplus tax money not owed to local tax agencies. Part of the problem is that often there isn't anyone at the overseas corporate headquarters who understands the ins and outs of the company's

Under equalization,

should pay the same

tax as in the United

an overseas executive tax plan. Companies, on the other hand, complain of the high costs of tax equalization and protection programs.

U.S. companies have different ways of dealing with taxation of overseas workers. For a company, the trade-off is a more expensive tax plan that gives the executive tax protecincludes investment income in calculating the hypothetical tax (what he would pay in the United States). The cheaper tax plan is full tax equalization that excludes investment income. And there are combinations in between.

"Although it is impossible to generalize, most companies do lean towards tax equalization: it is 'fair' and it doesn't put an extraordinary cost burden on the company," says Walter Meisen-kothen, tax partner with Arthur Andersen in London.

HE idea behind equalization is that an executive working overseas should pay the same tax as if he were working in the United States. Under a full equalization program, if the foreign tax is higher than the hypothetical U.S. tax, the company pays the difference. If the foreign tax is lower than the U.S. tax, the employee pays the difference. Often an executive doesn't have the option to do his own tax planning and has to accept the company's plan and pay the higher tax. The problem is not as acute in Europe as it is in the Middle East and parts of Asia because most European countries have higher tax rates than the United States. But in the Netherlands, Belgium and Britain, under certain tax plans, tax rates can be lower.

The protection philosophy acts more as an incentive to go abroad. In a lower-rate country, the employee only has to pay the lower foreign tax, and not the higher hypothetical U.S. tax.

A large proportion of U.S. executives working for U.S. multinationals in Europe have income from investments. A major area of dispute between the employer and the employee is whether the company should include such income in calculating the hypothetical tax withdrawn from the executive's paycheck. Some executives that have to sell their houses to move abroad want the company to pick up the tab on the capital-gains tax if money is not reinvested. The problem goes away if investment income is included in calculations of hypothetical taxes.

There is an underlying corporate fear, however, that if investment income is included, executives could rush into tax shelters.

Corporate tax plans that include investment income could cost the company money. "Difficulties generally arise when an individual gets into investments that are tax shelters. Who should get the benefit?" says John Andrews of Coopers & Lybrand in Bot some accountants suggest that executive tax shelters need not cost more money for the company if included in the calculation of hypothetical tax. Traditionally, accounting firms have focused their tax-planning efforts on reducing local tax costs. Now some firms are looking for tax shelters back in the United States for expatriate executives. By reducing the hypothetical tax an employee has to pay, a tax shelter will have the immediate effect of increasing the executive's compensation. As a result, the company will have to pay more local tax on that higher income. But, under U.S. tax laws, if the company's expenditure on local employee taxes increases, so do the company's foreign tax credits, which in turn reduce the company's U.S. tax liability. "It is impossible to generalize, but if done properly it can save the individual money and cost the company virtually nothing," says Mr. Meisenkothen.

UAE Says It May Cut Oil Prices

Competition For Sales Cited

The Associated Press

NICOSIA* — The petroleum minister of the United Arab Emirates says Abu Dhabi may act on its own to reduce oil prices to cope

The warning was believed to be the first public statement about the possibility of a price cut from a member of the Organization of Pe-troleum Exporting Countries since OPEC lowered official prices in March 1983.

Mana Said al Oteiba, the minis-ter, said, "I would like to state very clearly that Abu Dhabi will deal with its problem alone and in a matter compatible with its interests, with the minimum violation of

Mr. Oteiba was quoted in an interview published Sunday by the Middle East Economic Survey, a veckly publication that follows the il industry. ·Mr. Oteiba also is chairman of an OPEC committee that keeps track of developments in world oil markets and makes recommenda-tions on pricing and production to the 13-member cartel. Last week, panel recommended OPEC keep its prices and production unchanged and urged oil producers in and out of OPEC to maintain price and production discipline.

The official price of Abu Dhabi Murban crude oil is $29.56 a barrel. In spot markets, where oil not cov-ered by long-term supply contracts is traded, that blend has been trading for $1.20 to $1.40 a barrel below the official level, the report said.

Mr. Oteiba complained that since OPEC has not acted on his requests to adjust differentials between the prices of different blends of oil, "I think we have to deal with our own problem."
The benchmark OPEC blend,

Saudi Arabian Light crude, is sold at an official price of $29, down from the $34 that had prevailed between late 1981 and early 1983. While Mr. Otelba did not say in the interview how much of a cut the United Arab Emirates was contemplating, he had previously estimated a reduction of 40 cents to 50 cents a barrel would be required to meet competition and restore pro-

Soaring Fees Among Merger-Makers Raise Questions About Their Value

By Fred R. Bleakley

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — When Carnation Co. directors agreed to a $3-billion bid from Nestle SA earlier this month, the arbitragers who had gambled on a possible takeover had plenty to cheer about. So did loyal Carnation shareholders.

But no group was more delighted than the investment bankers who engineered the transaction. Without putting up any of their own money, Kidder, Peabody & Co. stands to draw $15.3 million in fees for advising Carnation and First Boston Corp. will pick up $7.5 million for guiding Nestle.

Investment bankers have never bad it so good. Corporations are spending more money than ever before to woo other companies — and to pay the firms that arrange those high-price corporate marriages. The dollar volume of amounced mergers this year has already surpassed the annual record of $82 billion set in 1981, And the Carnation transaction is only one of dozens where fees are in the multimillion-dollar range.

"These fees are like state lotteries — you wonder if there's any outer limit," said Robert Kirby, chairman of Capital Guardian Trust, a manager of $6 billion in stock investments.

The numbers are striking. Gulf Oil Corp. and Standard Oil Co. of California, for example, paid a record $63 million to Salomon Brothers, Merrill Lynch and Morgan Stanley for the advice the two companies received last summer on their historic $13.4 billion combination. Only a few months earlier, $47 million then the record - was shelled out in the Getty Oil-Texaco merger to four investment banking firms, including $10 million to First Boston for pulling the transaction together in the final four days of

Are the merger-makers really worth as much as they charge? That question is being raised more insistently as the fees grow larger.

There are protests even on Wall Street. A few firms that dominate the business have emerged as an oligopoly with bittle, if any, reason to compete with each other on a price basis. Their high fees — set starkly against the slow trading and meager underwriting that have plagued much of Wall Street this year — have given the Street a distinctly Dickensian hue, a contrast of haves and have-nots.

"More and more, corporate customers are looking upon investment bankers not as advisors but as people peddling companies — some kind of buccaneers, samurai or gunslingers — who will do anything to get a deal done," said Felix Rohatyn, a partner of Lazard Frères who believes fees have grown too large.

He said that "in the area of riskless services, there is an upper limit to what investment bankers should charge. It seems to me that by any rational standard, it is hard to justify fees of 10, 12 or 25 million dollars." Many investment bankers defend their fees. They say the long, harried hours they put in, the corps of back-up professionals that they supply as well as the negotiating sophistication and the financial skills that they bring to the transactions all warrant the price they charge.

Some firms go out of their way to pay relatively high fees, even on small deals. Insilco, for instance, a diversified manufacturer with $750 million in sales, is (Continued on Page 13, Col. 4)

Renault Posts First-Half Loss Of $386 Million

PARIS - Renault, the stateowned French car maker, on Tues-

Renault's chairman, Bernard Hanon, said at a news conference that it would be wrong to "multiply by two" to have an idea of the group's total 1984 loss. But he left no doubt that the full-year figure would be worse than 3.6 billion francs. Renault does not usually publish half-year results.

Renault faces tough negotiations on Thursday with labor unions on vages and proposed job cuts that the company considers crucial to meeting its goal of breaking even in

Mr. Hanon said the company will use a wide range of "safety net" measures such as early retirement aid to immigrant workers to return home and reclassification. He said the company will offer workers training programs of up to 24 months for what be termed "the key jobs" in the car industry over the next decade. But he said the restructuring would be difficult.

"This plan will go into effect only once it is signed by the unions," Mr. Hanon said. "We

NEW YORK - Staar Surgical Co., a two-year-old company based in Monrovia, California, has a lim-

It faces heavy research expenses, and it is banking on a first-of-its-kind product that will not reach the market for another three years, if ever. In the first six months this year, Staar had a loss of $890,000 and had revenue of only $329,000.

Staar Surgical is already a Wall Street phenomenon, a textbook instance of "a stock with a story." Its shares, offered a year ago at $6.25, hit $39 on Sept. 13, after a 2-for-1 split in July. On Monday, the shares that cost $3.125 a year ago closed at $19, down $4.875, after an unfavorable article in this week's issue of Barron's magazine. The stock is traded on an over-thecounter supplemental exchange.

The market valuation of the company is awfully steep relative to its sales," David H. MacCallum, a senior analyst at Hambrecht & Quist, said last week. "But they've got a revolutionary concept, and no

MELBOURNE — Consolidated Foods Corp. of Chicago emerged Tuesday as a third contestant in the takeover battle for Nicholas Kiwi Consolidated said that it holds 4.05 million shares, or 5.5 percent, of the Melbourne-based maker of > hold products. [A Consolidated spokesman told the Herald Tribune that the company had been holding talks with Nicholas Kiwi and expected to make an announcement shortly.] Last Friday, Nicholas Kiwi said it was holding talks with a foreign company and urged shareholders not to sell their shares. That recommendation followed Friday's announcement by Reckitt & Colman PLC of Britain that it proposed to bid 340 million Australian dollars ($282 million), or 4.60 dollars a share, for Nicholas Kiwi. Castlemaine Tooheys Ltd., an Australian brewer, earlier bid 296 million dol-lars, or 4 dollars a share, an offer rejected by Nieholas Kiwi's board. Nicholas Kiwi said Friday that it had reached an advanced stage of discussions with a foreign company that might lead to direct benefits to shareholders at least comparable to the Reckits offer.

KATE QUINTON'S DAYS

By Susan Sheehan, 158 pp. $15.95. Houghton Mifflin, 1 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. 02108.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

WE do not like to look at old age, but Susan Sheehan has looked at it hard and steadily in "Kate Quinton's Days." her fifth book and first since the publication in 1982 of "Is There No Place on Earth for Me?" - her Pulitzer Prize-winning portrait of a psychiatric

She has gazed upon the life of an old woman coming to the end of her days and described it so objectively that reading the result, you feel as if you were breathing in a blizzard. It burts, but it gives you a feeling of being cleansed. However much you may want to, you cannot look away. Sheehan's fictitiously named subject might be any one of a million sick, discarded people. When we meet her at the start of the book, she is lying in a Brooklyn hospital, gazing "across the room at her closet (it was marked 'A') and at her roommate's closet ('B')," trying to make the time go by.

But quickly she takes on individuality. She is suffering from osteoarthritis, gallstones and a urinary-tract infection. She is undernourished and depressed. The hospital wants her to enter a oursing home. She wants to return to her four-room apartment and the care of her daughter, Claire, a middle-aged woman, who is herself suffering a variety of ills, both physical and psychological. We want to dismiss them both from our awareness.

But Sheehan's gaze is unblinking. As her lens moves closer, we see Kate Quinton get caught up in an endless bureaucratic game of inter-views and paperwork. It is not entirely a ma-lign process. It means to qualify her for medical aid and give her nursing care at home, but its rules are exquisite in their complexity, and its players work at obscure cross-purposes. We wait for Susan Sheehan to protest, but her camera whirs on, recording nothing more nor less than the evocative details.

Kate Quinton has a personal history that takes us back to her beginnings in Ireland and Scotland, and then carries us forward through a story of immigration we've heard a thousand times before. It is extraordinary how Sheehan manages simultaneously to specify and to generalize. Kate Quinton could be anyone; yet her history is singular. What we never forget, of course, is that some day her history will be our own. Not too long from now, she will be us. The effect of this is complicated. Sometimes you want to scream in frustration at the indignities she has to suffer at the hands of hostile relatives and misguided health administrators. Sometimes you want to laugh and dismiss her story as one of those woeful histories that Edward Gorey might dream up.

Sometimes you despair at the pettiness of old age's preoccupations. Sometimes you rejoice at the simplicity it all comes down to. But wherever it goes, Sheehan's narrative always seems to right itself. There really aren't any culprits. The officials are trying to do their jobs. The family villains are the victims of

The end of "Kate Quinton's Days" mirrors its beginning. Exactly one year later, "Kate Quinton, a pale, thin elderly woman, sat in a wheelchair in her apartment in Brooklyn, trying to make the time go by. But the wonder is, she is alive and looking ahead to the future.

"At five o'clock, Kate Quinton sat in her kitchen sipping sherry and ginger ale. She listened to the nektock of the grandfather clock she had first heard as a child in the kitchen of the house in Kirkintilloch. Time was passing as agreea 0! as she could expect. She looked forward to walking in the spring."

I'm not sure why this closing is so powerfully affecting. Perhaps it's the way Sheehan has reduced our expectations. In the face of all that threatens Kale Quinton, we are happy just to find her alive. When worse comes to worst, it's ecough simply to be alive.

Moreland made the defensive play of the game in the top of the fourth, catching a ball that could have put San Diego back in the game. With one out, Steve Garvey bunted for the first Padre hit; one out later, Sutcliffe walked Terry Kennedy and Kevin McReynolds, loading the bases. Carmelo Martinez then sliced a ball into right that Moreland charged and, tumbling

■ Game 1 Notes

 Tuesday's first pitch was thrown out by Ernie Banks, the Hall-of-Famer who was made an honorary coach by the Cubs for the playoff series. The national anthem was sung by Jimmy Buffet.

 The playoff game was the first in Wrigley Field since Oct. 10, 1945, when Chicago lost to Detroit, 9-3, in the seventh game of the World Series.

• Graig Nettles, the San Diego third baseman, is the only player still active who played in the first league-championship series play-off. Nettles played for Minnesota in 1969 when the Twins lost to

• The 13-run margin was the biggest margin ever for a shutout and a playoff game. Baltimore blanked California, 8-0, in 1979, and the biggest victory margin to date had been 11 runs, Los Angeles cliffe singled and Dernier walked trouncing Pittsburgh, 12-1, in 1974.

GO-GO GOAT — Sam Sianis, owner of Chicago's Billy Goat Tavern, shows the establishment's mascot their tickets for Tuesday's playoff game, where they were guests of the Cubs. The tavern's founder, Sianis' uncle William, put "a permant-proof hex" on the Cubs in 1945 after he and a goat were turned away from a World Series contest at Wrigley Field. Sianis lifted the hex when the Cubs invited him and Billy to a 1981 game.

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — Main Street is dead. Dead as the Bijou Theater with double-feature programs that changed three times a week. Dead as the dry-goods store that used to sit at the intersection of Washington Avenue. Dead as the trolley car that used to clang down the middle from the First National Bank all the way out to the Bosky Dale Amusement Park. Dead as Sinclair Lewis, Dead, dead, dead, i must have been aware of its death for years, but I had never acknowledged it, had never said right out loud: "Main Street is dead. It died years ago. Main Street has been dead for years, and it's never coming back."

I think you know why I never said that It was the same reason so many of you have never said it, I suspect. It was because - well. what was America without Main Street? It was a place that mind and soul did not want to be forced to come to grips with. Without Main Street, it was hard to distill America into a hanoful of simple truths. Main Street was where the Fourth of July parade was held, where you got the mortgage for your first house and bought the presents for your child's first Christmas; hut more than that, it was the center of things.

It was the product of an age when the country had a center that

Nn wonder I had never consciously conceded that Main Street was dead. What made me speak the truth aloud was a televisinn show on which some professional rightwingers were grousing about President Reagan's being a dangerous

This kind of malarkey affects me like chloroform, and I was near deep slumber when nne of these philosophers said, "Reagan has turned his back on Main Street and sold out to Wall Street."

If I hadn't been weakened by sleep, I might have let this pass as meaningless political hlather; instead, I spoke alnud:

"Main Street is dead, you idiot!" And came wide awake feeling terrible, because f had finally uttered the dreadful truth. It left me in a sour mood toward their imbecilic metaphors, I might have got through the rest of my life without coming to grips with the debilitating truth.

Well, it's useless spending good anger on politicians: it just encourages them. Instead, I fell to specutating on American geography and wondering which part of the landscape can best be said to shelter today's right-wing constituency.

Which piece of American geography has President Reagan betrayed by selling out to Wall Street? The shopping mall seems the logi-cal answer. While Main Street spent all those years dying, the shopping mall was slowly replacing it as the home of commercial activities Main Street once housed.

Still, most of the best Main Street activities do not occur in the shopping mall. It doesn't counte-nance the Fourth of July parade. for instance, since the shopping mall is for parking cars, and parades make a mess of the parking

More importantly, the shopping mall is not at the center of anything. It is situated on the edge of something, prohably a black hole that was once a city centered on Main Street. And it is at the foot of a superhighway access ramp, alnng which nn trolley cars clang off to-ward the Bosky Dale Amusement Park, for the sufficient reason that the Bosky Dale Amusement Park lies buried under the very shopping-mall asphalt to which the access ramp delivers cars withnut unseemly clanging. Can shopping-mall people be devoted to the good old-time conser-vatism that fetched the people of long-dead Main Street? Not likely.

On the shopping mall, people know they are standing not at the center, hut vaguely off toward the edge of a center that has failed to hold. Nat knowing where they stand or what the score is, shopping-mall people must have a hard time staying calm and conservative.

People who do nnt know where they stand or what the score is tend in be twitchy, suspicious, accident-prone and suckers for confidence men, rather than cool, level-headed conservatives. I doubt President Reagan, or anybody with good sense, would dare turn his back on people like that.

Carol Burnett: A TV Child of the Movies

By Charles Champlin Las Angeles Times Service

T OS ANGELES — In the days of her youth. Carol Burnett saw eight movies - four doublefeatures - a week on Hollywood Boulevard in the company of her beloved grandmother, who was raising her.

They went early, before the prices changed at I o'clock. Carol was tall for her age, and her grandmother would place a shortening hand on Carol's head, so there would be no questions asked about getting in on a child's "We'd see a double-feature once and then leave - unless there was a James Stewart film, in which case my grandmother would leave and I'd stay and watch it again as many more times as it showed." Burnett said.

"I must have been 8, 9, 10, in there somewhere. But the funny thing was that I knew that I would know him someday. It wasn't a wish, wasn't a dream, not a fantasy. I just knew I'd meet him, and not as a performer. Per-forming wasn't in my dreams

As these things will happen, she did meet Stewart in 1958. She had come from New York to be on the "Dinah Shore Summer Show," had an interview with Mervyn Leroy at Warners and asked to be introduced to Stewart, who was filming "The FBI

Reality imitated a Carol Bur-

"He was doing a scene on a raised platform. I elimbed up and we said helln, and I hurhled the usual things you say when you meet an idol, and then I stepped off the platform, putting one foot right into a hucket of whitewash that was sitting there. I never lonked back, I just kept walking, dragging the hucket along with me. Ruined my shoe and stocking. Jimmy has nn memory of it at all. He never lonked hack either."

Stewart and Burnett have been meeting at tribute dinners in each other's honnr for years and had hoped to work together for the first time in "The Late Christo-pher Bean," set to start filming this month. But a virus several weeks ago forced her to with-

Burnett: Four double features a week in childhood.

Although she came to fame in television, after beginnings nn stage in New York, Carol Burnett is a child of the movies - the fan become a star.

"I used to say I was born during a reissue of 'Rasputin,' " she said. Her father managed a second-run movie house in San Anunnin, Texas. where she was born. "Managed it for 10 minutes," she said. "He did a lot of things for a little while. He was a wonderful, sweet, crippled man. Nnbody didn't lave Jody, hut he was an alcoholic who never beat it. When I was a tiny child I used to get dumped in the theater. My mather was trying tn get her own life

For the henefit of her own three daughters, Burnett is putting her memories of these matters and more onto long yellow legal pads and then into the type-

"Mostly," she said, "it's to tell the girls about these two extraormother, so they'll know more about where I'm coming from, as they say, and therefore where they're coming from - what made them the hairpins they are."

She and her parents made one quick exploratory visit to Hallywood, she vaguely remembers, then went hack to San Antonin. Her mother returned alone, and later Carol and her grandmother settled in the tiny apartment in the same building. It was 1941, she was 8, and they were on welfare. One of her current research efforts is to discover how much, or how little, the payments were.

When she went to work as a teen-ager, it was as an usher, at Warners' Hollywood Theater uniform, brass buttons, epaulets, military discipline, salutes, square turns and 65 cents an

She seated Dehhie Reynolds at one premier, and she seated Rock Hudson at another. They later co-starred on stage in "I Do, I Do." He had no recollection of their confrontation at the premiere, which is surprising, she said, becoming the comedienne again for a moment, because it was her thought that she had thrown her arms around him and declared undying love.

She saw "Strangers on a Train" 57 times from Aisle 2, and when Robert Walker died, she was so upset she was unable to go to

She lost her epaulets and her joh when she tried to persuade a couple to wait five minutes until "Double Indemnity" was over so they could see it from the begin-"They just wanted to get in the dark and neck, as I should have realized," Burnett said. "They made a fuss, and the little martinet who ran the ushers came over and fired me on the spot."

World War II, she said, "was to me what John Wayne and the other guys say it was. My girl-friends and I were sometimes Patty, LaVerne and Maxine [Andrews] singing Boogie-Woogie Bugle Boy for the troops, and sometimes we were Claudette Colbert, Paulette Goddard and Veronica Lake in 'So Proudly We

By the time she reached the dinary women, Namy and my University of California, Los Angeles, it was clear that her future lay in performing, and she went off to New York to find her career. Her father and mother died too soon to know just how big that career would turn out to be, but Nanny lived into her early 80s and her granddaughter had the pleasure of hringing her to New York to see the "Garry Moore Show" and the early musicals, where her fame began. Now divorced from her husband, Joe Hamilton, Carol Burnett has taken an apartment in New York and will divide her time between Manhattan and Los Angeles and a home in Hawaii. After 11 years nf a television series. Burnett will settle for the
